“ Stacy was a beautiful person. Thanks for attending junior prom with me. You will be missed.

“ The sweet little girl with a paper towel, running with the ash tray to the rubbish as soon as someone put out a cigarette because "there should never be any evidence that things weren't clean".

The young girl asking me, Auntie [pronounced: Ant-EE] Carol, "Do you think I will take after my mom's side of the family (petite body shape) or am I destined to look like my dad's side?...no offense"

The wonderful young woman dancing with my Rick with tears in her eyes at his wedding.

The slightly older young waoma who, when on the phone with me, would tell me how she used to laugh and say, NO WAY to her mom when Susie would tell her that her body would not always look the way she wanted it to.

The sweet person that always wanted the best for everyone she loved (and her heart was filled with love to give).

My only regret is that life did not treat her the way it should have, the way that she so richly deserved.

Rest in peace, Stacy.
Much love,
Auntie Carol
